APPENDIX 2

PROGRESSIVE DISCIPLINE MODEL

Pursuant to Article 7 of this Agreement, the following are guidelines respecting progressive discipline:

- (a) An employee is entitled to clear instructions concerning work requirements.
- (b) If work is unsatisfactory, the matter should be discussed to determine whether instructions are misunderstood or if the problem is beyond the control of the employee.
- (c) If work continues to be unsatisfactory, the employee should be advised as to what improvement is needed.
- (d) If unacceptable work is determined to be the employee's fault, it demands a formal meeting. Article 11.3 requires ample notice to arrange Union representation. The employee will be advised of the specific problem, remedy and granted reasonable compliance time.
- (e) If work remains problematic at the end of the compliance time, the Employer should write the employee about the issue and copy the Union Representative. Improvement expectations must be explicit and a warning of further disciplinary action if written instructions are ignored.
- (f) If the problem persists, further disciplinary action, dependent on the infraction may be warranted. Further discipline should be progressive giving an employee an opportunity to "rehabilitate" as necessary and might include suspension and ultimately discharge.

A determination as to whether there is 'just cause' for discipline may be an issue. Serious infractions may begin at the suspension stage or even be in themselves grounds for discharge. Discharge is seen as the "capital punishment" of labour relations and is usually only contemplated if an employee is unable to be "rehabilitated".

An employee may grieve any disciplinary action taken by the Employer on the basis that it is unjust as noted in Article 7.1. In this case the grievance procedure outlined in Article 7 will be followed. Copies of correspondence and substantiating information should be immediately provided to the Union Representative.
